"Amid the storm of English accusations which has fairly overwhelmed us, the most singular is the charge against Mr. Seward of wishing to involve this country in a war with England. Of all the strange delusions about us that somebody has put into your heads this is the very wildest. Mr. Seward is not a man to declare war against the republic of San Marino. I presume there are few things in the world which he likes less than war. He ignored our civil conflict till the knowledge of t was all but crammed down his throat at the sword's point; and as to foreigners, his sole anxiety has been to keep out of their way, and keep them out of ours, and give them no pretext

"Several of the Paris journals express their satisfaction at the settlement of the Trent difficulty, and congratulate the United States on having acted with so much moderation and self-command. The feeling of our contemporaries inclines more towards America than England in the matter, and some of those journals even go the length. of imputing to the British Cabinet a desire to fasten a quarrel on America on any pretext, however futile. Such a supposition we conceive to be completely unfounded, first, because England has enough to do at home with her manufactures and commercial undertakings to rander a war anything but popular; and next, because the American naon is not one that any Power whatever would choose to encounter unless urged to such a course by some strong necessity. We subjoin a few extracts from the articles of which we speak, commencing with one from the Debats .-"The outburst of joy which has taken place if London on the receipt of the news, and the testi-

England not only uses the language o satisfied national pride, but breathes treely like man who finds a heavy weight removed from his breast. The Post affects a little coldness and iplomatic haughtiness. 'We hope, it says that this tardy reparation has been accompanied by the apologies demanded; but the Times, that echo of public opinion, treats the question of excuses as one of little value; and, being content to sec the nightmare of a maritime war dispelled, is disposed to pass ever them...
